EdCamp Conferences are sweeping the nation. They are conferences planned by educators for educators. The structure of the conference is very informal, with attendees signing up to run sessions first thing in the morning.

The conference will be free from corporate vendors and booths, with the focus being solely on conversations about education. Attendees will come from all over the Midwest and will range from classroom teachers to administrators to coaches, authors and school board members.

There will be time for attendees to gather informally to share ideas as well as a variety of sessions for them to attend, run by their colleagues and fellow educators.
